On Demand Reports with SharePoint Interactive Workshop

On demand reports can be modified quickly and easily by business users, helping them to prioritise and highlight critical information as business situations evolve. This capability can translate into earlier action to stem potential losses and seize opportunities. This free workshop will look at the capabilities required for on demand reporting and the role that Microsoft SharePoint 2010 can play. We will use a recent client case study to demonstrate what can be done.

When: Wednesday 28 September 2011, 9.30am -12:30pm with lunch to follow
Where: Thorogood offices, Ealing Film Studios, W5 5EP

Background

A reporting system cannot anticipate all business eventualities but a degree of flexibility can be provided. Making that flexibility easy to use by the consumers of the information has real advantages. As business situations evolve business people can respond by modifying reports to highlight information that has new importance. If they can then easily share their new perspectives and insights with colleagues then the organisation's capacity to sense and respond to business challenges is improved. Sharing the improved reporting across an enterprise can steadily improve best practice. Creating this kind of capability and business value is an IT challenge, but one that can be met with the right technology and skills.

Content

The workshop looks at how business users can be offered structured capabilities to modify reports, dashboards and models using the range of enterprise data assets. The workshop will explore what is now possible in on demand reporting, demonstrate the capabilities of SharePoint 2010 and use a real world example to illustrate the challenges, solutions and business benefits

Is it for you?

Do you share responsibility for increasing the responsiveness of IT solutions to business change? Would it help you to see what other people have done? If so, this free workshop will be a worthwhile investment of your time.

Format

The workshop is for up to eight people in a relaxed informal setting. Our specialists will present, facilitate discussion and answer questions. The venue is the Thorogood office in Ealing Film Studios on Wednesday 28 September 2011, from 9.30am – 12:30pm, with lunch to follow.
